FlightWorks Supports Corporate Angel Network

Kennesaw, GA (August 4, 2008) -- As part of an ongoing nationwide outreach, generously supported by FlightWorks FlightWise® aircraft owners, FlightWorks partners with Corporate Angel Network (CAN) to provide free private jet transportation to cancer patients and their families. Corporate Angel Network, a White Plains, New York based charitable organization, matches the empty seats on corporate aircraft with patients in need of transportation.

Working with patients, physicians, corporations, flight departments and leading treatment facilities across the country, Corporate Angel Network transports over 200 cancer patients every month. Cancer patients, bone marrow donors and bone marrow recipients, who do not need medical support while traveling, are eligible for this program.

Through the cooperation of leading corporations and private jet owners, Corporate Angel Network provides patients free, comfortable, life-saving flights to cancer treatment centers across the United States. FlightWorks fleet has supported Corporate Angel Network for nearly ten years, providing several flights per year. Since its founding in 1981, Corporate Angel Network has coordinated more than 25,000 flights.

"Corporate Angel Network provides a crucial service to people in need, and we are proud to support their efforts," says FlightWorks CEO Scott A. Beale. "FlightWorks clients are a very caring and socially responsible community; we, too, embrace these values as part of our corporate culture. CAN provides an opportunity for FlightWorks to give back to the community utilizing our strengths in aviation."
